Funny story

When my dad was going to school, he wrote a story that happened to him. I thought the story was funny so I am going to write it down. He was thirteen years old when he wrote it. It's called "The Six penny piece"....

One day dad got to go to the shop for the teacher (he was in sixth class.) He had to buy cigarettes for the teacher. At that time there were two shops, P.J Kilcoyne's and Morrisons. Today it was P.J Kilcoyne's turn.

Off he went and when he arrived at the shop he wished he could buy an ice cream. But he bought the cigarettes, and he went off. On his way back he had to cross three fences. On the final fence he slipped. When he got up, he picked up the money and cigarettes, he then noticed he had lost a sixpenny piece. As he searched he thought about all the trouble he would be in.

He had to return to school without it. As Master McKeown took the money off him, he quickly looked at it, then he put it into his pocket.

After school, my dad told his parents Thomas and Eulie about what had happened. His mother told him, "Tell the teacher what happened or teacher might think you are stealing his money.

As he finished the jobs around the farm he became more worried. When he finished he took off his wellies in the hallway and what fell out? The six penny piece. He was so happy.

The next day dad gave the money to teacher. When Master McEnroe heard the story he began to laugh. The teacher gave him back the coin and said “Buy yourself an ice cream”.

In the shop, dad carefully picked an ice cream and came to the counter to pay. To end dad’s perfect day P.J. Kilcoyne said “Ah have it on the house this time”. It was the best penny piece he ever lost.
